The Palais Royal's new buyer of millinery and ribbons, late with Messrs. R. H. White & Co. of Boston, is already showing he has talent. He has just returned from New York, and explains to the writer why ribbons are to be sold here at just half prices. He says: "I have secured 10,000 yards of ribbons that ladies of Boston know of as loom ends. Ribbons by rule of trade must always come in 10-yard pieces, so that any pieces less than 10 yards are looked on as remnants by the makers. The loom ends of the leading maker in the country are this season to come to Washington instead of Boston. They include choice satin and gros grain, double-faced satin, gros grain ribbons, guaranteed without defect, in all widths and colors."

"Princess of Wales" Costume.

Since the Princess of Wales was seen with the black and white costume at the late swell garden party the fashionable women of London have discarded their bright color garments. The latest street costume is of black serge, with which is worn a man-like waistcoat of white duck. The imported costume sells at $35. But here is a fac simile, made of best storm serge, and only $7.50. Of course such suits were never made to retail at the price. They and a few hundreds others in navy serge with braid trimming were secured by the Palais Royal's "buyer" last week in New York. The maker closed out at 50 per cent discount to clean his "loft" prior to commencing making of winter goods.

Here are the ever stylish English Suitings of mixtures not so pronounced as to be ever out of style, here the popular Henriettas and Cashmeres, here the sturdy Scotch Cheviots that are favorites year in and year out. The writer asked himself this question, and the following reply is all he can give: Mr. Culley, the new buyer of woolens, is anxious to have fabrics only of his own selection in the new store. It is not for the writer to criticise. His duty to tell you that half and less than half prices are quoted for fabrics that would certainly bring profitable prices a few weeks hence.

OUR COUNTRY'S INDEPENDENCE

The Folly of Fixing a Cheap or which originally did not receive any favor from me, and the wide distrust it has excited should be speedily removed. But, after its repeal, we shall not be dependent upon gold alone for currency, as there will be in the treasury much more of silver than of gold, more of paper currency than ever ber fore, and the silver dollar will not be demonetized. Whenever more silver can be coined and utilized without crowding gold to a premium, it will be done by universal consent; but the treasury of the United States should be relieved from its embarrassment of furnishing gold to pay for silver bullion. We may not ever be able to keep as much silver afloat as has been done by France, because our people prefer something lighter, of equal nominal value, and more profitable to handle; but we can easily carry enough of both silver and gold for all the business of the country, if the mastery is not wholly surrendered to silver.

"To maintain silver, with our present standard, on a parity with gold, while increasing our public debt by the daily purchase of over five tons of silver bullion, from foreign dictation, and secure that will at once relieve our financial condition from foreign dictation, and secure the stock of gold which must naturally much be secured. Americans should not be deprived of that home without our consent.

"Foreign nations," said the speaker, "will HOUR OF THE DAY WHEN ITS not be persuaded to adopt any measure in READERS HAVE THE TIME AND favor of silver by the fact that it might afnot be persuaded to adopt any measure in INCLINATION TO CONSULT ITS ford some relief for the United States, but ADVERTISING COLUMNS, AS they will do much for their own relief. Too ready to believe whatever may be derogaready to believe whatever may be derogatory of the American people, they have confidently believed that, with Boeotian stolidity, we should be contented with silver only, and that the stock of gold now in America and all future productions would easily be transferred to their possession. Four of the great powers of Europe are training soldiers, possibly to make famous other fleids than Waterloo and Sedan. Their success, as they believe, requires not merely the heaviest artillery, but the heaviest stock of gold, and this they are financially maneuvering to acquire. Nations, as well as men, often get gold and yet fail to keep it. We, very well, have learned how recklessly destructive martial glory is to treasures of destructive martial glory is to treasures of gold, whether that of the victors or the van-quished. These ambitious powers have re-garded America, not as a formidable com-petitor for gold, but as one of their unfail-garded America, not as a formidable competitor for gold, but as one of their unfalling sources of its supply, as well as an unfaltering and hungry market for silver.

"America, however, can be a competitor for gold, and by far one of the strongest, for the reason that it is a home producer of gold as well as of silver, and will use both only for all the beatitudes of peace and prosperous commerce. By the great cost of large armies, and greater loss of labor in domestic industries, European nations are really crippling their financial resources, while our small army and our peace-loving habits relieve our people from such excessive burdens, and will surely in the end give us the primacy in financial power. A repeal of the silver-purchasing clause in the act of 1890 will give us a practical force, so long manifestly disregarded, in the final determination of the silver problem, and Europe, after all, to provide for its own financial necessities, is most likely to reach the conclusion that silver should not remain obsolete and useless only as a commodity."

India and England. After reviewing the situation as to silver in England and India, Mr. Morrill suggested that it would be opportune and, perhaps, sound policy for England to begin the cultivation of better political and financial relations with her kin across the Atlantic. and fairly consider whether or not international bimetallism is destitute of all merits.

Nor can I favor the free coinage of silver by the United States alone were the ratio between the two metals to be advanced from 16 to 25 to 1, or even to 28 to 1, for the reason that the present colossal output of silver cannot be annually absorbed by any single nation, and a preposterous attempt to abnation, and a preposterous attempt to ab-sorb it on our part might win a smile from the governor of Colorado, but would pro-voke the ridicule of the commercial world, the governor of Colorado, but would provoke the ridicule of the commercial world, and inexorably cause its further depreciation. No remedy will have a prosperous ending which does not squarely and fully recognize the existing extraordinary magnitude of the amount of silver which must be furnished with a new market.

"Mr. Chernuschi, by far the ablest bimetallist that has yet appeared, has always insisted that it was only necessary for the United States for the time to cease from coining or from purchasing silver to bring European nations to a proper and just international arrangement by which the general use of silver as an integral part of the money in use among leading nations would be speedily consummated. Delay may have made this more difficult. The Bank of France now most unwillingly hoards 250,000,000 of 5-franc silver coins, which are there appreciated much as the $363,000,000 hibernating in the United States treasury are appreciated here. If we tamely assume the burden of a monopoly of silver here, a burden quite large enough for the whole world, it may induce France and other nations also to join the gold monometallists of Europe.

"After the repeal of the silver-purchase law of 1890 the United States will not wrestle alone with the overproduction of silver, as the question will equally confront foreign nations and can not be shirked. There is no statesman among such nations that does not know the United States can fix and carry a currency on the gold standard, if necessary (though I do not now believe that it will ever be necessary), with greater ease than any other nation on the earth. We produce enough of the metal ourselves to supply any needful annual increase of currency in gold coins, much more than equal to our annual increase of ilterior which our people are dependent upon any foreign country in peace of war.

THE SILVER ACCUMULATION.

Senator Morrill of Vermont delivered in the Senate today an interesting and forcible speech on silver, in which he gave an interesting review of legislation leading up to the present situation.

"Let me frankly avow," he said at the outset, "that I do not yet abandon all hope of bimetallism, and, accordingly, I shall gladly vote for the repeal of so much of the act of 1890 as requires the purchase of silver, which originally did not receive any favor from me, and the wide distrust it has excited should be speedily removed. But, after Dopulation.

"There is little now of the necessaries of life for which our people are dependent upon any foreign country in peace or war, and much of what we produce to sell, like cotton, petroleum and provisions, can not so readily be obtained elsewhere in equal abundance or on terms equally satisfactory. There is no possible combination of circumstances that can deprive the United States of its large and natural share of the world's gold, unless by free coinage we go directly to the silver standard, or unless our revenue laws shall be so framed as to permanently fasten upon the country an excess of imports over exports, and of this no party in our country can ever afford to take the risk.

"With a sound currency foreign gold captial will flow into our country by millions for investment, but with any cheap or uncertain standard of money panics will be an every day occurrence, and foreign capital would elements.

"It has been absurdly charged." said the

The Effect of Repeal. "The repeal of the silver-purchasing part of the act of 1890 will at once unlock millions of gold now hoarded, as well as millions of the old United States notes, to redeem which gold has long been held in the treasury, as it would satisfy the public that Congress as well as the President propose to maintain every dollar of our currency as good as every other dollar, of no greater and no lower value than we have had, and so just and sound as to give as-surance of being just and righteous for both the debtor and creditor today as well both the debtor and creditor today as well as years hence.

"We cannot afford to take the risk of a silver dollar that may curtail the usual reward of wage-earners nearly one-half and cause an epidemic of strikes. Merchants might possibly shirk or transfer to others a large share of their losses from a depreciated dollar; but farmers, for what they have to sell, would be compelled to accept whatever legal tender might be offered. Indirectly the duties on all imported dutiable merchandise, if paid in depreciated silver, would suffer a reduction that would more than satisfy even the exterminators of protection.

of speech to take up the pickax and spade to dig rifle pits from which to assail others, or build up earthworks behind which to merely protect themselves. The declaration that 'the silver question was of equal and greater importance than the question whether the country should remain united or divided,' was an utterance that will go unclaimed by any state.

"The democratic party, once distinguished for its intrepid hostility to all cheap substitutes for legal tender money, having successfully pushed gold to the front during the Jacksonian era, with-Missouri then in the lead for gold and now in the lead for silver, more recently, though not fully, accepting the fantastic fiat theories of those who claim for the government omnipotent power to keep an unlimited circulation of either silver or paper on a parity of 16 to 1 we might somewhat advance the market price of silver; and by no other less heroic measure, nor by any cunningly contrived compromise, while the supply is great and the demand down to zero, can the United States by itself lift silver out of the mire of overproduction.

of overproduction. The Increase of the Silver Output. "Thirty-three years ago the yearly production of silver in the United States amounted to only $150,000; but in 1892 it amounted to five thousand times that sum. The silver extremists now demand that the United States shall not only take and pay for the whole of this vast increase, but at the valuwhole of this vast increase, but at the valuation of thirty-three years ago, and will not even aid in opening the way for largely increasing the demand for silver by making it the interest of many nations to co-operate in a bimetallic standard for its use.

"Probably, with one-half of all our iron furnaces closed, and one-half or more of all woolen and cotton mills idle, we have rarely required so small an amount of currency for actual business purposes. The difficulty is that currency, to an extraordinary amount, is being hoarded by millions of depositors in savings banks, who have feared they would have to wait sixty days if they were not drawn out at once. Only one country in the world has a larger per capita circulation of money than the United States. We shall have plenty of money whenever distrust goes out of circulation.

"According to the great Roman orator, 'a commonwealth should be immortal,' and I cannot suppose that any Senator would willingly limit the life of our government to any briefer period. In all the advantages of power and wealth, of natural and industrial productions, of coal, iron and copper, of food products and of territory and climate, no other people will dispute the superiority of, the American republic. Nor will they dispute our primacy as to the producer of gold and silver. They dispute only our capacity for self-government, and deny the wisdom of universal suffrage. They believe we are to stumble on silver.

"The crucial test is whether we are or not ation of thirty-three years ago, and will not umble on silver.

"The crucial test is whether we are or not "The crucial test is whether we are or not to drop from the bimetallic standard of gold and silver, maintained on a parity, to the dangerously crippled standard of silver only, and thereby limit to an inferior currency the foremost business nation of the world. The grave responsibility rests upon a democratic administration now in full control of both branches of Congress, as well as of the executive department. No government can be sustained which does not fulfill its pledges in good faith. The public debt, national and state, and all other contracts, by our recorded pledges, are payable in legal tender on a parity with gold. The honor of the country may be in peril. Whatever policy will relieve the public distress will be my policy. Whatever party favors the public credit will have my favor. Whatever measures support public honor will have my support."

A LAW FOUND

To Prevent Continuous Fishing in the Potomac River. Since the expiration of the special act of Congress for the protection of fish in the Potomac river it has been generally understood by fishermen that nets and traps could be used at all times of the year, but such is not the case, as the act of 1880 prohibits fishing in the manner stated between the 30th day of May and the 1st day of January. During the time that such fishing s permitted the law requires the removal from the water of all nets and traps on

So many nets have been used in the river during recent years that "Commodore" Sutton and other officers of the patrol boat made a search for some law against the offenders, and the law of 1890 was revived. Last week the boat started out on a raid and several nets were captured. Saturday night the officers captured two fyke nets in the waters off Buzzard's Point, and yesterday morning John McKee, an old colored man, claimed them. He was arrested and the case was tried in the Police Court today. The old man plead ignorance of the law as an excuse for his offense. When the Russian Grand Duke Alexan when the Russian Grand Duke Alexander was leaving Newport the other day he thoughtfully sent to all the ladies who had invited him to entertainments superb bouquets tied with the Russian colors and to several special friends handsome vases or other ornaments were sent with his compliments. These souvenir gifts will no doubt be greatly cherished by their happy recipients, and in their simplicity go to show that distinguished people can confer great favors without going to much expense. The Italian Ambassador and Baroness

The Italian Ambassador and Baroness Fava were the special guests of an afternoon tea and reception given them by Gen. and Mrs. Stockton at Churchill Hall, Stamford, N. Y., one day recently. The rooms were decorated and the flags of the United States, Italy and Holland were conspicuous. Minister Weckherlin was among the guests. Miss Stockton assisted her mother in receiving and Miss McCammon of this city presided at one of the tea tables. The marriage of Miss Helen Murphy to Don Vicente Dominguez, first secretary of the Argentine legation at Madrid, is announced to take place shortly in London. Miss Murphy is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. T. Murphy and through her mother is related to the Earl of Antrim and Lord O'Neill. The Dominguez family is very pleasantly remembered in this city. The father of Don Vicente Dominguez was formerly the Argentine minister here. He had quite a large family of sons and daughters and Mrs. Dominguez favorite form of hospitality was to give lawn parties. The family occupied the residence lately vacated by ex-Gov. John Lee Carroll, on Rhode Island avenue, now the site of the new St. Matthew's Church. In the spring of the year the garden used to present a beautiful and animated scene when Mrs. Dominguez received her friends. The family has been living in London lately, where Mr. Dominguez represents his country at the court of St. James. The marriage of Miss Helen Murphy to

Veteran Firemen Make a Visit.

Yesterday a number of the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association accepted the invitation of Mr. J. Richard Brown to visit his home in Alexandria county to christen a dinner set presented Mrs. Brown by the veterans some time ago. The visitors received an old Virginia welcome and spent the day in discussing a capital dinner, the foundation of which was the chicken yard, garden and orchard of the host, and in fighting the battles of the past o'er again. They returned late in the afternoon, each bearing a souvenir of the visit.

A colored gentleman by the name of Smith, who was recently appointed consul at Santos, Brazil, told the reporter that he expected to be present, although he was not a member of the committee, for he wanted to see how his brothers in the work were getting along. The meeting, he said, was called for the purpose of issuing an address which would uphold the President in the stand he has taken on the silver question. The meeting would be made up of those who were in sympathy with the administration, and all those who had any criticisms to offer on what the President is doing would be rigidly excluded from the meeting, and they would not be given an opportunity to be heard. The meeting would not be called upon to heal any differences in the colored democratic party, said the consul, for the very simple and all-sufficient reason that there are no differences. In an interview published in the New York Sun yesterday Dr. Peters says: T believe that Emin Pasha still lives, and I have good grounds for my belief. The news of his alleged death that was received which would uphold the President in the stand he has taken on the silver question. The trains were delayed, and in several instances the windows on the northwest side were completely demolished. No one was killed, although several persons were severely injured by the hall. Several horses and cows were killed in the fields. At Atlantic Highlands the storm caused the loss of two lives. John Leolson, a Scandinavian, aged twenty-six, was struck by lightning at the Central railroad pier, and H. E. Hurnel of South Plainfield, N. J., who, while seeking protection from the storm in Bentley's bathing pavilion, was suddenly crushed to death by the collapse of the building. Edward Brennan, whose home is in New York, went out on the Niagara river in a sailboat at noon yesterday. While off Grass Island he attempted to fasten his craft to a passing steam yacht. In so doing his boat was overturned, and he was thrown into the water. The crew on the yacht tried to save him, and followed him down as far as they dared toward the "death line," but finally had to give up, as Brennan disappeared just before reaching the white line of breakers. His body went over the American fails, and it is thought will hardly be recovered until some days pass. Brennan was twenty-six years old, and had been boarding at the Hotel Atiantique.
